FANTASY ADVENTURES

MAGICAL MOONSTONES

Julia, Isabella and Emma have all inherited magical moonstones from their aunt Cordelia. Moonstones are typically associated with good luck and are said to enable a person to see into the future. But Cordelia's moonstones are even more powerful, taking the wearer to wherever she wishes.

Discover the Magic of the Moonstone with our necklaces for you and your doll. The stones (approximately 5/8" adults, 3/8" for dolls), are mounted in gold and strung on handsome velvet cords. Each comes packaged in its own black velvet pouch with the Carpatina logo embroidered in gold. Also enclosed is the story of how the moonstone first came into Cordelia's possession.

Emma

Guinevere, Queen Elizabeth, Maid Marion, Juliet. Emma is fascinated by these famous women of history and legends. With wit, bravery, compassion and beauty, they commanded extraordinary love and loyalty.

Emma is able to step into the shoes of the women she admires thanks to a magical jewel—a gift from her great-aunt. Like her cousins, Julia and Isabella, she now explores the worlds she once only read about.

Emma's impetuous spirit and great determination sparkle in her vibrant green eyes. With her glossy red hair and rosy complexion, she has a beauty that is as distinctive and timeless as any of her heroines. Emma's crepe dress, in soft green and adorned with roses, is classically graceful. Like the women of legends, she lends a royal bearing to whatever gown—and role—she wears.

More About Emma

Emma is slim-bodied, 18" tall and made of high-quality vinyl. Created for play and display, she has open-close eyes, movable arms and legs and easily styled hair. Emma comes packaged in a royal blue presentation box, with complete care instructions.

FANTASY ADVENTURES

Julia

The Middle Ages, the Renaissance and that lovely mythic era that fairy tales describe. Those are the ages that fascinate Julia. She dreams of brave knights, fair ladies, and lordly monarchs — with perhaps a dragon or two — who inhabit a time that's never been and has always been.

Following in the footsteps of her great-aunt, Julia now explores the times and places of her dreams. Aunt Cordelia willed Julia, Isabella and Emma jeweled necklaces. The gem, along with a deep and true wish, is enough to transport the wearer to where she longs to be.

Julia is never long from setting out on her next quest. Lively brown eyes and a glowing complexion reveal her imaginative mind and venturesome spirit. Too impatient to dress her hair, she lets it flow down her back in long chestnut waves. A knee-length crepe dress, trimmed with delicate roses, and ribboned slippers suit her perfectly. But for tomorrow's adventure, who knows?

More About Julia

Slim-bodied and made of high-quality vinyl, Julia stands 18" tall. Her hair is designed for easy care and restyling. With open-close eyes and movable arms and legs, she's perfect for displays or play. Julia comes packaged in a royal blue presentation box, with complete care instructions.

Fantasy Adventures

Isabella

Magical forests, fairy kingdoms and fantasy lands. Those worlds of beauty, where legends and myths are everyday but never common things, always entranced Isabella.

Now, thanks to a wondrous jewel bequeathed to her by a great-aunt, she is able to actually journey into those realms. Like her cousins Julia and Emma, Isabella must only wish the world into being to make it real.

Memories of those experiences linger in Isabella's dreamy blue eyes and gentle smile. The sun of a fairy summer has silvered her long blonde hair and brought a pink blush to her cheeks. Her clothing is elegant simplicity. She wears a flowing blue silken dress, dotted with lace daisies, and blue, ribbon-trimmed shoes. As Isabella has discovered, a secret world of magic often lies behind quiet beauty.

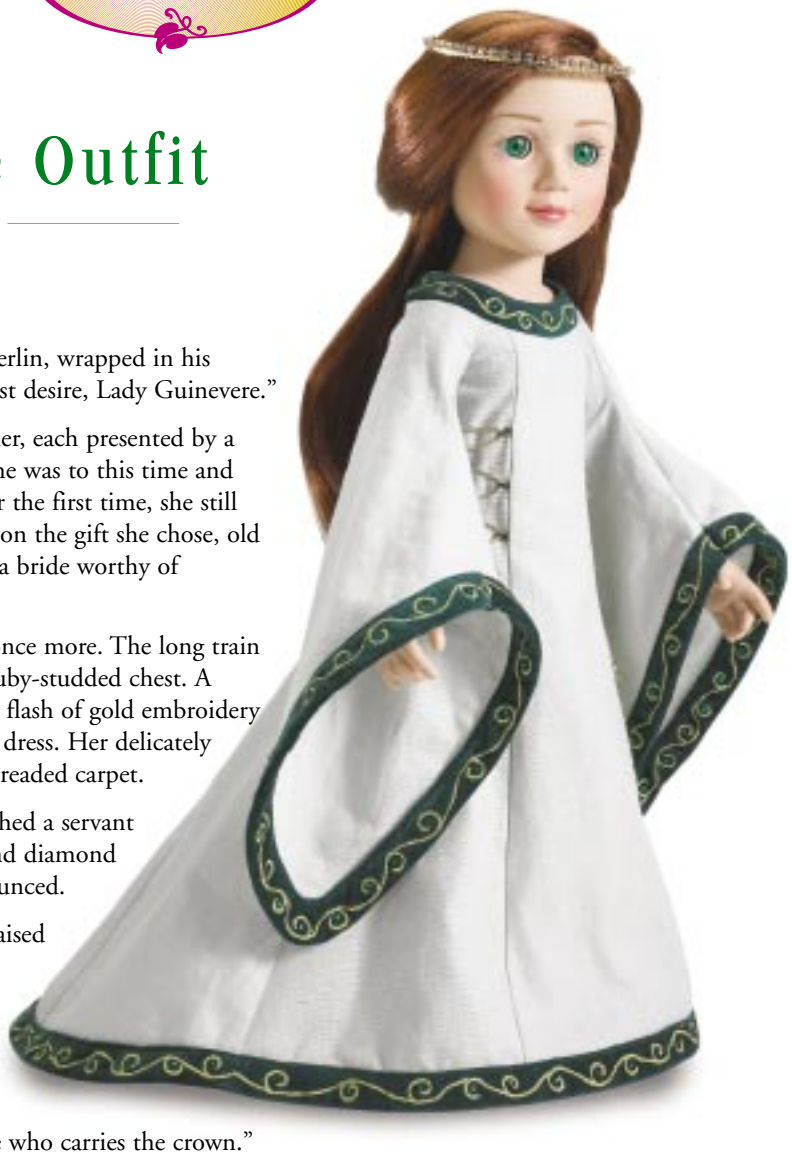
FANTASY ADVENTURES

Guinevere Outfit



"Choose," commanded the wizard Merlin, wrapped in his starry cloak. "Choose the gift you most desire, Lady Guinevere."

Emma surveyed the gifts in front of her, each presented by a handsome servant. Stranger though she was to this time and place, and playing Guinevere's role for the first time, she still knew that this was a test. Depending on the gift she chose, old Merlin would judge whether she was a bride worthy of King Arthur.

Emma passed down the row of gifts once more. The long train of her green linen gown skimmed a ruby-studded chest. A carved ivory mirror briefly caught the flash of gold embroidery and velvet and rhinestone trim of her dress. Her delicately laced slippers slid over a soft, silver-threaded carpet.

But Emma didn't pause until she reached a servant bearing a simple but exquisite gold and diamond circlet. "This is my choice," she announced.

The servant before her bowed, then raised the crown to Emma's head.

But as he withdrew his hand, Emma caught it. For a long moment she looked deep into his eyes, then dropped a curtsey. "This is my choice, lords," she declared. "The one who carries the crown."

The servant threw aside his cloak to reveal a king's garments. Beaming joyfully at the wizard, he announced, "I'd say my bride has found me, Merlin."

Emma smiled. "Perhaps, Arthur. Or perhaps it's love that's truly found us both."

FANTASY ADVENTURES

Medieval Adventures

It has been a memorable day for Julia. As a first-time guest at the royal castle, she spent most of her time watching nobles arrive to pay homage to their new king.

Now the whole company—including His Majesty—has gathered in the main hall for a dance. As the music begins, the king rises and, with a smile, surveys the room. So many lovely ladies, Julia realizes, so many fine dancers.

Then his eyes settle on her. In disbelief, she hears him ask, "Lady Julia, will you join me?"

With all the poise she can muster, Julia moves to his side and the dance begins. Around the hall they twirl, the king a handsome figure in blue. And Julia is a vision in soft white, the skirt of her floral gown skimming the marble, her full bell sleeves swinging with each turn and the gauzy princess veil trailing like a cloud. Only a handsome gold belt and the gold and diamond trim of her dress ornament the long sweep of pure ivory.

The music ends and Julia draws back to curtsey to the king. Gently he takes her hand and bids her rise. "My thanks, Lady Julia. You have honored a king."

Renaissance Princess

On a early summer morning, Julia steals out of her room and into her host's garden. Her visit with the duke has been lovely. Only two things have proved a disappointment: She's seen too little of his famous garden—and nothing of his even more famous resident painter.

Now as Julia wanders the flowered lanes, she stoops to sniff a blooming bush. As she raises her head, she finds a bearded man watching her. At last the painter has chosen to appear.

He nods, then quietly asks, "My lady, if you would?" beckoning for her to slowly turn. Amused and a bit bewildered, Julia picks up the hem of her gown and spins. As she turns, the sweeping mauve and ivory tafetta gown trails over the grass like a bed of roses swaying in the breeze. The sun catches on the golden embroidery woven throughout and lights on the brilliant stones wrapping her waist and neckline. Briefly she lifts her arms, before letting the long drape of her sleeves fall to her sides.

The painter nods again and then bows. "My lady, if you would permit: May I paint your portrait?"

Julia smiles. "And that," the painter adds. "That smile I must have too."

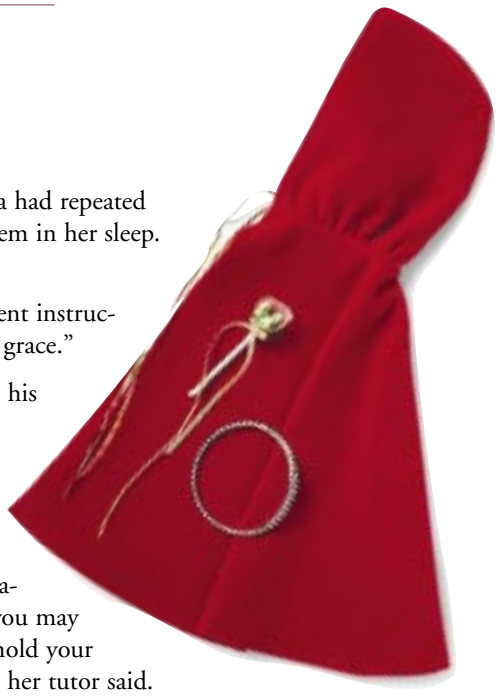
Extras



It was her final lesson before the dance at court. Julia had repeated the steps over and over until she could have done them in her sleep. Yet still she felt uneasy.

She turned to her tutor. "Many thanks for your patient instruction. Now if only there were some magic to give me grace."

Her tutor smiled. Then a thoughtful light came into his eyes. "Magic? Ah, but I may have the very thing."

He stepped across to an old trunk and triumphantly drew out a bag. "For you. Three treasures."

Julia gasped as he reached into the bag and pulled out the first treasure: a golden tiara, studded with diamonds. "So that you may remember to hold your head high," her tutor said.

Then he produced his second gift: a charming rose wand, wrapped with ribbons. "So that you may remember that your hands, as well as your feet, are things of grace."

Finally he produced his last surprise, and Julia cried out in delight. The third treasure was a velvet hooded cloak, of deepest red and with a golden tie.

"And this, master, what is it to remind me of?"

He smiled. "My regard for you, Julia. And my certainty that no one at the dance could look more lovely and graceful in it than you."

Fairy Dream

On midsummer morning, all the fairy folk from the Deep Wood gather to celebrate the beauty of summer. Decked in gossamer and draped with flowers, they emerge from the shadows to take their places at the center of the meadow. Joining hands, they sing of the harmony between sun and earth.

At the center of the circle stands Isabella, dressed in the shimmering gown that she fashioned by moonlight. Like the leaves of the forest, the serrated sleeves and hem of her graceful gown stir in the breeze. And as she sways in time to the song, the green chiffon, lined with satin and sprinkled with silver and rhinestones, catches the sun like a fine spider web. A softer light shines from the rhinestones on her velvet shoes and gauzy choker.

Now the dance begins and Isabella gracefully spins around the magical ring. Once, twice, three times she circles her people. Then as the sun moves directly overhead, she slips inside the circle again and stretches her glistening wings to greet the day. The magic is complete.

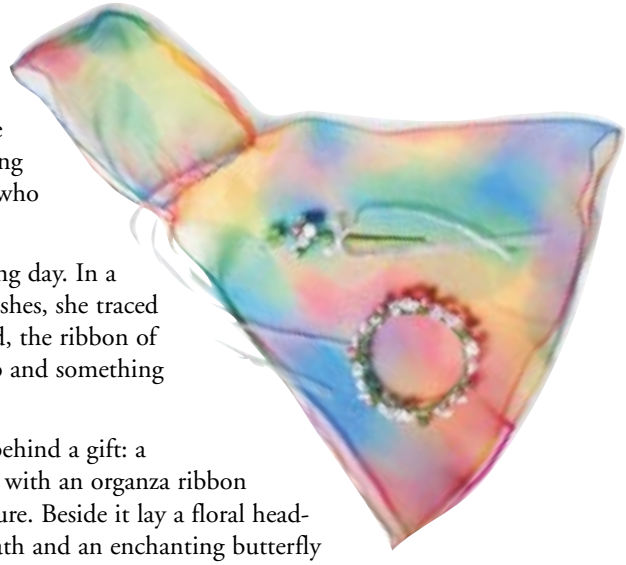
Fairy Dream Extras



There is a belief among the folk of the Deep Wood. The first rainbow of spring will give a gift of great joy to the one who discovers where it touches the earth.

Isabella found that spot early one spring day. In a clearing surrounded by wild flower bushes, she traced the rainbow to its end. As she watched, the ribbon of light poured into a delicate spider web and something took shape.

Slowly the rainbow faded. But it left behind a gift: a gorgeous cape of multicolored chiffon with an organza ribbon closure. Beside it lay a floral headwreath and an enchanting butterfly and flower wand.

Isabella knew this gift was like the rainbow: one that must be shared. She took it back to the Deep Wood so that any who desired could wear them. But on the first day of spring, the fairy people always insist: the gifts of the rainbow are to be worn by Isabella alone.

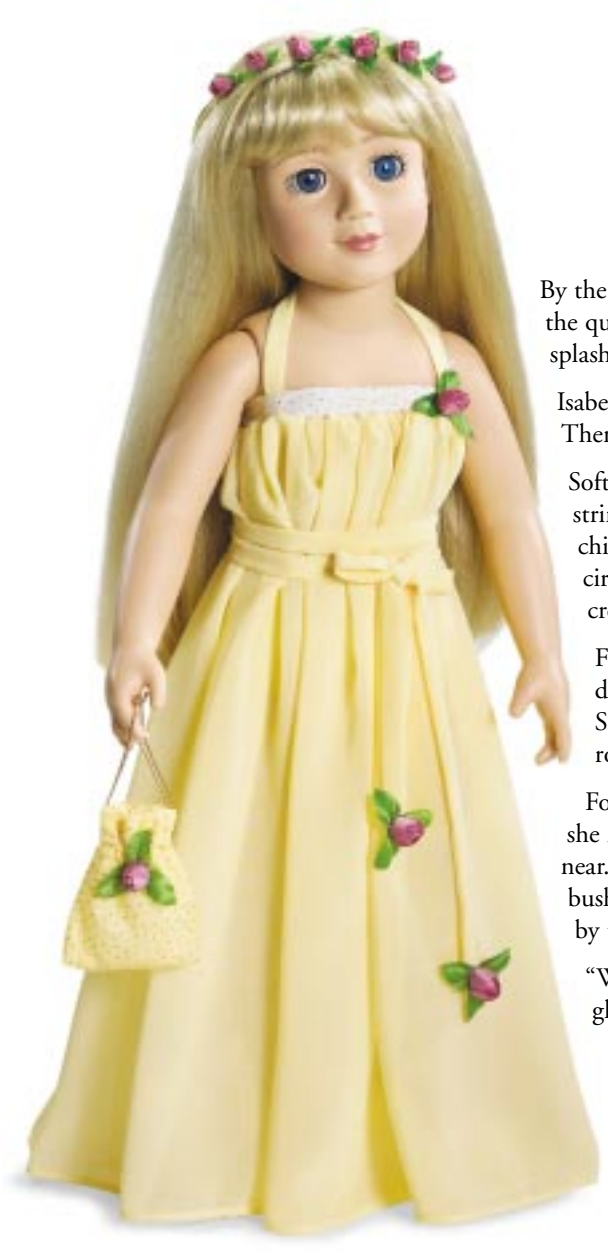
FANTASY ADVENTURES

Yellow Splendor



By the edge of the brook, Isabella pauses. Nothing disturbs the quiet of this glade except the soft breeze and soothing splash of water.

Isabella kneels and places three wild roses in the stream. Then as they drift away, she prepares for her visitor.

Softly she hums as she takes more roses from her drawstring bag. One she pins to the strap of her buttery yellow chiffon dress. Two more she hangs from the belt that circles her waist. The rest she weaves into an elegant crown for her hair.

Finally Isabella rises, shaking out the full folds of her dress, sending sparkles through the gold organza lining. She moves to the center of the glade and lays one last rose in front of her.

For a long time Isabella waits, never doubting. Finally she hears it: the sound of tiny bells that quickly draws near. Shyly a silver horn breaks from behind the blackberry bushes. Then a hoof, a beautiful head and a mane crested by three wild roses.

"Welcome, my friend," Isabella whispers. And into the glade, the unicorn steps to greet her.

Pink Romance

Isabella stared up at the gated mansion and sighed. There would never be another ball like this one for Prince Orlov. But now she was not to attend—all because she had left her invitation in the carriage that had long ago sped off.

Isabella gazed down at her dress and sighed again. It had seemed the perfect choice for this special night. The cut of the gown was simple: elegant thin shoulder straps, a closely fitted waist bound by a satin belt and a lovely full skirt. But the material was exquisite: the finest pink lace, sprinkled with silver seed beads and rhinestones, lined in pink satin. For jewelry, she'd chosen a delicate strand of silver beads, with a matching tiara.

"And why should such a pretty dress make a fair lady so sad?"

Startled, Isabella glanced up to find a cloaked man smiling at her. Shyly, with some embarrassment, she explained.

"Ah, I thought this might be yours. It does match your dress," said the stranger, handing her a satin rhinestone bag. "I found it on the path."

Isabella smiled. "How can I ever thank you?"

"Perhaps by accompanying me?" the stranger suggested. "With such a lovely lady beside me, my hosts might forgive me. It's bad manners to be late—especially if, like me, you're the guest of honor."

HEIRLOOM PEASANT BLOUSE

"Hurry, Julia," Isabella called.
"It's starting to rain."

Julia quickened her steps to catch up to her cousins. On weekends, the girls always spent time together. Today, it had been Emma's choice what to do, and she'd picked a trip to the antique shops. Now the girls were hurrying home before the rain drenched them.

But as Julia passed the vintage clothing boutique, something tugged at her mind. She slowed, then called out to her cousins, "Let's go in here for a bit. We can wait for the rain to pass."

Isabella glanced up at the sky. "That might be some wait." But Emma added her voice, "Let's go inside. I love that store. And we can't get much wetter if we wait."

Isabella shrugged and followed her cousins inside. Quietly the girls circled the shop, pointing out finds to each other. Finally Julia glanced outside. "Well," she sighed, "it looks like it's clearing up after all. I guess we could go home."

But as they started for the door, Isabella stopped. "Oh, look," she gasped.

She pulled from a rack a beautiful peasant blouse. All three girls stared in admiration. The blouse was made of pure white linen and embroidered in silk. Delicate tassels dangled from the neck and cuffs, and the neck was charmingly smocked. It was undoubtedly a handcrafted piece of the highest workmanship.

"It's so beautiful!" Emma exclaimed. "Let's see what size it is." She reached up to the collar, then exclaimed again, "I can't believe it!"

In mute astonishment, she showed her cousins the embroidered tag inside. All three knew that some vintage clothing bore the embroidered name of the owner. But it was a shock to read on this tag the name of their own aunt Cordelia.

"It was meant to be," whispered Isabella. "Emma wanted to come shopping in this part of town. Julia insisted on coming inside this store. And I…well, I just had to hold this blouse as soon as I spotted it."

As they shared the adventure, so the girls shared the blouse. It was no surprise to any of the cousins that it seemed to fit each of them perfectly.

This blouse is also available in adult sizes. Inquire at www.carpatina.com.
